

FISH BOIL & DINING GUIDE TO DOOR COUNTY

DOOR COUNTY
WISCONSIN
live life well

Long before it was trendy, the local food movement was at the heart of menus and dinner tables in Door County. It wasn't a marketing tactic, but a necessity. When you live on a peninsula surrounded by a Great Lake, accessible only by bridges, you can't help but lean on local farmers, fishermen, and artisans.

Local products have been used for decades by Door County restaurants, often just because it's the easiest way to get them. It's little wonder then that the two things Door County is most famous for – cherries and fish boils – highlight the local harvest of orchard growers and the fresh catch of commercial fishermen.

But with an influx of young chefs and restaurateurs in the last decade, Door County dining has taken another step forward. Chefs are highlighting the products from the farmers, gardeners, and artisans of the area as never before, bringing that authenticity to your table. Whether it's beef or fish from a local farm or fishery, or local produce, diners eat knowing they're supporting local families and getting a true Door County experience.

Door County Fish & Seafood Boils

Fish boils are an integral part of Door County tradition and have been one of the area's most alluring tourist attractions for more than 70 years. Fish boils function today just about the same way they did 100 years ago: locally caught whitefish is boiled on an open fire, in an outdoor community-style kitchen. The fish, potatoes (and sometimes onions, depending on the recipe) are cooked to perfection. Please be sure to call ahead for reservations.
